

Introducing Your New Dog to Your Current Cat

Many dogs and cats get along well, especially if they've had experience or grown up with each other. Dogs who have never lived with cats are more likely to treat cats like other dogs and try to play with them. Or they can treat cats like prey animals and try to chase and possibly kill them. Similarly, cats who have never lived with dogs can see them as predators and run away or become defensively aggressive. Keep in mind that a dog can kill a cat very easily, even in play. But if your dog is gentle and friendly, and he's not a squirrel-chasing predatory type, he may be a good candidate for successfully living with a cat. In general, kittens and laid-back cats are good candidates for successfully living with a dog.

It's up to you to protect your new cat and set up introductions carefully so that she feels safe and has a pleasant experience getting acquainted with your dog. Here are key guidelines:

- Low stress first meeting First impressions last, so you want the initial meetings to be as stress-free as possible for her. Refresh your dog's obedience skills before you bring your new cat home. Two key skills are coming when called and "leave it." These will help you control your dog if he gets overexcited around your cat.
- Doorway intros At first, confine your new cat in a room with her food, water and litter box. Introduce your cat and dog by the doorway to that room. Fill your pockets with treats that your dog and cat love, like chicken, tuna, cheese. Keep the door open but block it with a baby gate. Walk your dog slowly by the doorway several times each day for a couple of days. Praise and treat him for calm behavior, and then toss the cat a treat as well. This way, your cat will associate your dog with delicious treats.
- Train & treat If your dog overreacts to the cat, get his attention focused on you. Avoid using leash corrections. Instead, ask him to do basic obedience skills, like sit and down. Reward him with tasty treats for his obedience around something as tempting and distracting as your new cat! Your cat should be free to approach the baby gate to get closer to the dog or to retreat if she wants to. Toss her a treat any time she approaches the gate.
- Go at cat's pace Let your new cat set the pace. If she chooses to hide under furniture when you and your dog walk by, let her. In this case, your introductions may take longer—maybe weeks longer. Taking it slow will help to avoid a bad first impression. Cats can take months to form relationships with other animals. Never attempt to force any interactions by holding your cat, putting her into a crate or carrier or restricting her movement in any way.
- Living room intros If your cat doesn't seem afraid of your dog as you pass by the doorway of her room, you're ready to introduce them in your living room. Make sure your cat can get away from your dog during the introduction. She should have the freedom to retreat, hide, or jump up on something higher than the dog.

- Keep dog under control Keep your dog on-leash during these introductions for the first couple of weeks. Allow the leash to be loose, but hold onto it in case your dog decides to try to chase your cat. Use your dog's recall and "leave it" skills if your dog starts nosing or following your cat and she seems perturbed. When you ask your dog to come to you or leave your cat alone and he responds, reward him with a tasty treat.
- Separate When you're not around or can't directly supervise, keep your cat and dog confined in separate areas of the house.
- Reward good behavior If your dog seems friendly or cautious, not much intervention on your part is required except to praise and reward your dog for his good manners.
- Interrupt — don't punish Interrupt any chasing, barking or agitated behavior from your dog by moving him away from your cat. Ask him to do some easy obedience skills for food rewards. Avoid scolding, yelling or jerking on your dog's leash. A positive approach is crucial because you want your dog and cat to learn a pleasant association with each other's presence. You don't want them to learn that everyone gets tense and angry and bad things happen when the cat or dog is around. Dogs are more likely to engage in chase or prey behavior when they're tense or aroused.
- Trim cat's nails Most cats will accept a young dog and correct him when necessary. Be sure your cat's nails are trimmed before bringing her home so that she doesn't hurt your dog if she corrects him.
- Prevent litter box raids Your dog shouldn't have access to your cat's litter box. If he does, it will be highly stressful to your cat, and your dog may eat the feces and litter.
- Feed kitty up high To prevent your dog from eating your cat's food, try feeding your cat on a high surface, like a window sill, dresser, shelf or cat tree furniture.
